UK Outlook for Wednesday 7 Jul 2021 to Friday 16 Jul 2021:
While Wednesday is likely to be another unsettled day with rain or showers, after this there is expected to be a trend towards more settled conditions as drier weather moves in from the southwest. By the end of the week, looking at mostly dry conditions, although southern areas could still see some showers or, possibly, some more prolonged rain, which could be accompanied by stronger winds. Towards the end of the period things are looking mostly fine and dry, though there remains a chance of isolated thunderstorms. Many areas are likely to see temperatures trending upwards through the period, with parts of the south potentially becoming very warm. Winds are looking to remain light across the UK for most of the period.
